1. During the winter of 1947-48, resistance to the regime in Yugoslavia was limited to defensive actions and to the work of organizing.
2. A few offensive activities, purely local, took place in December. [redacted] a former officer in the Royal Yugoslav Army, led attacks on government garrisons with the aid of the Kalajitovic units from Sandrak. Similar attacks were made in the Sumadija region [redacted] a battalion of the Sumadija Corps [redacted] operates near Kragujevac. During a night operation of this battalion in January, two of their Chetnik veterans, 2nd Lt. Ljubisa (Ljusa) and 2nd Lt. Milos (Tromotorac) were killed. A UDB Major and eight of Tito's soldiers also lost their lives. The December offensive operations of the Musikravic corps were an effort to distract the government forces from the Chetnik forces in Bosnia, who were menaced at that time.
3. In the village of Mackovac the chetniks succeeded in halting the activities of the communal council.. They burned the archives and looted the cooperatives. Government artillery and air forces were used against them.
4. In Bosnia and Montenegro there are Chetnik patrols, and some fighting has taken place there.
5. Krizari units have proceeded with the task of organization in accordance with the instructions of the Royal Yugoslav Army.
6. Guerrillas have distributed pamphlets in Slovenia and in Istria.
7. Conditions for mobilization are good, but certain preparations are necessary. Arms are required, as is the completion of a cadre of capable officers.
